

Reproduction Services in Special Collections and Archives

Administration

Last updated October 2013

Materials housed in Special Collections and Archives at James Branch Cabell Library and Tompkins-McCaw Library for the Health Sciences may be reproduced for research or reference purposes provided that a) the physical condition of the material will allow its duplication without harm; b) duplication of the materials is not in violation of copyright law; and c) reproduction of the material does not violate donor agreements.

No reproduced materials may be used for publication, public display or incorporated into any electronic storage and retrieval system including posting on the Web without written permission of the VCU Libraries. Reproduced materials are not to be added to the holdings of another repository.

Digital cameras may be used in the Special Collections Reading Rooms with advance permission. Flash photography is prohibited.

Self-service photocopying is allowed for certain materials in Special Collections and Archives. All other materials will be copied by Special Collections and Archives staff.

Fees for reproduction services are set by the VCU Libraries. VCU offices that transfer archival records to Special Collections and Archives may request reproductions from these materials at no charge.
